Double-Stranded RNA specifically promotes assembly of RIG-I/MDA5 and IKK ϵ into a trimolecular complex. RIG-I-like receptors (RLRs) are intracellular pattern-recognition receptors that recognize double-stranded RNA (dsRNA) from viruses. The sensor molecules of the RIG-I family are the mitochondrial helicases, IFN-inducible helicase (IFIH1) and melanoma differentiation-associated gene 5 (MDA5), both of which can bind viral dsRNA and trigger antiviral signaling. The signaling components are comprised of scaffold proteins and a catalytic core, including a helicase, which are activated by self-oligomerization. RIG-I, MDA5, and IFIH1 possess the main IFN- β promoter stimulator (IPS) motif within their carboxyl-terminal region, and IKK ϵ catalyzes IPS activation by stimulating
