The present invention relates to the fields of DNA technology and the development of recombinant DNA compounds and the use of such compounds in the development of pesticides and other agriculturally useful compositions. DNA technology is an attractive research tool for the creation of new strains of plants. Indeed, the discovery of foreign DNA sequences from plant, animal, and microbe origins in tomato (U.S. Pat. No. 5,162,632) and Arabidopsis (U.S. Pat. No. 5,597,719), among others, has led to the development of new materials used in the improvement of crop species. In particular, the generation of transgenic plants has become routine in many laboratories, and the basic principles underlying these techniques are well-established. Furthermore, in the event that a desirable trait is to be transmitted to a new plant generation, it is only necessary to cross the desired transgenic plant with a second plant of the desired lineage in order to obtain progeny. In view of this, methods have been devised for the manipulation of plants at several stages in their development. For example, the generation of techniques whereby plant genomes can be introduced into the nuclei of plant cells has made it possible to readily manipulate plant traits at the genetic level. The most common method of introducing foreign DNA into the nucleus of plant cells is currently electroporation (U.S. Pat. No. 5,276,185), which generally involves the introduction of a foreign nucleic acid into the cell at a time when the cell is in the G2 phase of the cell cycle, and when the concentration of endogenous plant DNA within the cell is extremely low. Although electroporation is generally quite reliable, there are a number of potential drawbacks associated with this method, including the potential death of cells in the vicinity of the DNA-carrying electrode. Another commonly used technique, Agrobacterium-mediated transformation, has found use primarily in a research setting. In this technique, recombinant DNA is transferred into the cell through the use of a tumor-inducing agent such as Agrobacterium tumefaciens. In particular, Agrobacterium is able to transfer DNA into plant cells through a mechanism known as horizontal gene transfer 09e8f5149f

To establish and quantify the transcellular, transepithelial ion transport by the human ileum, the passive transport of Na+, Cl- and HCO<sub>3</sub>- was investigated by means of the transepithelial ion transport experiment (TIET) and the direct measurement of the short-circuit current (I<sub>sc</sub>). The measurements were performed using a modified Ussing chamber with ileal mucosa as the apical membrane-side and with NaCl solution as the basal chamber-side. In the TIET, fluxes of Na+, Cl- and HCO<sub>3</sub>- from the mucosal to the serosal fluid compartments were determined from the initial changes of the concentration of the solution during the linear changes of the diffusion potential V<sub>c</sub> across the epithelium by addition of an HCO<sub>3</sub>- free solution. Furthermore, the rate of change of the difference between the concentrations of HCO<sub>3</sub>- in the mucosal and serosal compartments,  $\Delta HCO_3^-$ , was also calculated from the V<sub>c</sub>, the values of which were largely determined by the size of V<sub>c</sub> and the permeability of HCO
